

Among the "firsts" which Vienna can claim are:
The first engagement between INFANTRY in northern Virginia.
The first tactical use of the railroad.
The first Union soldier from the State of Ohio to fall during the war.
The first time after the bombardment of Fort Sumter that the flag of South Carolina was unfurled in battle. There were many other interesting things which happened in Vienna during the war, but they form another story.

* * * * *

In reviewing these pages, we realize that most of the "firsts" of that tragic conflict took place upon the soil of northern Virginia. We likewise feel that the people of this region were among the first to join hands after the conflict, and in mutual sympathy and understanding, face into the future of America without bitterness.

Contributions to a Bibliography of Arlington County

(Continued from page 42)

diags., tables. (Report, largely statistical, on population, employment, housing, income level and retail trade, with estimates to 1968 for the first two.)

VIRGINIA POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE, BLACKSBURG. ENGINEERING EXTENSION DIVISION

Industrial Survey, Arlington County, Virginia, by R. L. Humbert in collaboration with R. H. Begg [and others]. By the Authority of the Arlington Chamber of Commerce, Clarendon, Virginia. Blacksburg, Va., Engineering Extension Division, Virginia Polytechnic Institute, 1930. 63 p. Tables. (Considers the industries of the County and factors which would be pertinent to industrial growth, such as topography, agriculture, climate, labor, power, transportation, water.)

WEDDERBURN, ALEXANDER J.

Souvenir Sesqui-centennial of Alexandria, Va., Illustrated. Press Comments and Historical Sketch of City. Washington, D. C., Nat'l Eng. Co., 1899. [80.] p. Illus. (General souvenir booklet with several pages specifically on Alexandria County and other scattered references.)

WRITERS' PROGRAM. VIRGINIA

Virginia; a Guide to the Old Dominion. Compiled by Workers of the Writers' Program of the Work Projects Administration in the State of Virginia. New York, Oxford University Press, 1940, xxix, 699 p. Illus., plates, maps. (American Guide Series.) Bibliography. (General source on Virginia history and description, with some references to Arlington.)